HUMANS : Suburban Nightmare

Posted by NFlames on 2004/6/29 2:44:26 (66 reads)

Charles and Deborah would love to have you for dinner!

Charles and Deborah Rosenblad are portrait American citizens, that is, if a portrait American citizen is a dysfunctional cannibal with anger management problems! The couple seems genuinely happy together until Charles makes the mistake of selfishly killing their dinner guests against Deborah's plans. Not long after, Charles and Deborah are at odds with each other sort of like War of the Roses, but without any of the ritzy assets

First off, get it out of your mind that this is going to be a plasma-laden splatfest, you'll be sorely disappointed. The gist behind Suburban Nightmare seems to be nothing short of black comedy. Dialog driven comedy at that, there's not much blood, barely any gore to speak of, but the bickering that goes on between Charles and Deborah through the entire film is well written, funny, and acted out very well, in fact this is some of the best acting I've seen recently in Independent Horror.

We get to see a single occurrence of some VERY fake, VERY firm breasts and the scantily clad "pet" that's trapped in the Rosenblad's torture room, that's it as far as the skinometer goes. There's also an "indie" requisite lesbo scene that actually works for me. So often do the lesbian scenes just get thrown into a movie and I roll my eyes and sigh. Not so in this case. Keeyes and Rochon did a great job with the writing. I never fast-forwarded, and I never looked at the running time on the box. Good stuff!

If you're a horror nut who enjoys a dark comedy driven by funny dialog pick this up. If you only like mindless violence, gore and nudity, then steer clear. I really enjoyed this one though.

2.95 out of 5 plates of spaghetti and "pete"balls
